WHALE HUNTING.

LENGTH 500 FEET. PRICE, $55.

This is the most exciting and thrilling Film that has ever been taken and is, moreover, the only Film in existence of this industry. The Film shows the look-out man in the crow's nest sighting the prey, then goes on to depict incidents in the chase, with the whale rising every now and then from the water to blow. After that can be seen the enormous harpoon being fired from the gun in the bows of the vessel, and striking its victim. Immediately on receiving the harpoon, the beast makes the most frantic struggles to escape, and so powerful is it, that, although the whaling steamer has her engines put at half-speed astern, this frantic whale towed her ahead at the rate of four knots an hour. The "playing" of the beast by means of steam winches is shown, as is also eventually its death. After this, the curious operation of inflating the whale, in order to make it remain on the surface of the water, is seen, as well as a fine picture of the whale being towed back to the whaling station where the blubber is removed. A close view shows this tremendous animal which weighs 75 tons.
